Dear Friend,

For the past year, we've been immersed in conversations about diversity, equity, and inclusion. Fundamentally, this is about who has power – to make decisions, voice opinions, and allocate resources.

As the community foundation serving greater Park City, we are tasked with solving our community's most challenging problems. What we're learning is that there is power, even, in who gets to define what the community's problems are.

We talk a lot in our organization about smart philanthropy and best practices. We're learning that when people make decisions for others, instead of having those most impacted in the driver seat, grants and programs aren't as effective as they could be.

Inclusion is a learning journey, and improvement requires that you start – wherever you are. We've started, and already are shifting how we think about and do our work.

It's people like you, who look around a town that's as near perfect as Park City and say: "How can I use my resources and expertise to make it even better? Or ensure that it is good for all?" that position us to tackle tough issues – like climate change, mental health, and early childhood education.

We bring together local nonprofits, political and business leaders, caring donors, and community members to contribute financial resources and innovative ideas that effect lasting change.

We believe Park City's best days are ahead and that a thriving community requires ongoing investments in people, place, and culture. It is our role to examine deeply how we work and ensure that we are as effective as possible.

Thank you for joining us in this work and supporting our many initiatives, funds, and nonprofits that address the very real issues that exist here in our community.

With gratitude,

Katie Wright
Executive Director

Kristi Cumming
Board Chair

Bill Rock and family.

"This foundation is not afraid to lead. Not only does it support other nonprofits but it has moved into a convening role, as well as into a leadership position in our community on Social Equity. By supporting the Community Foundation we are helping many other nonprofits that are essential to Park City's well-being.

– Bill Rock

Park City Community Foundation Board Member and Park City Mountain Chief Operating Officer

For the Love of People

SEVEN YEAR-OLD ERICA kept getting in trouble in school, and her family was looking for help. Why did she respond physically whenever she was provoked?

The family's first language is Spanish, and until recently, bilingual mental health services were hard to come by in greater Park City. But in 2018, Park City Community Foundation helped channel funding from the Katz Amsterdam Charitable Trust to Jewish Family Service to create a new bilingual counseling position.

Jewish Family Service hired Roxana Cordova, CSW, who provides counseling in Spanish in Park City three days a week. Through word of mouth, Erica's family found out about Roxana and asked for her help.

Roxana saw Erica for several counseling sessions. Roxana also used her broader community contacts and had the school do an assessment, where it was discovered that Erica had ADHD. Roxana helped the family understand the need for—and to obtain—medication to help manage the ADHD.

Even more important, Erica loved the skills she learned in her sessions with Roxana, from meditation to learning how to talk about feelings and how to ask for help.

Erica's mother was recently called to the school about a fight. Fearing it was once again Erica's doing, she was relieved and encouraged to find out that this time, it wasn't Erica's fault. Another child had been pulling Erica's hair, and Erica didn't retaliate. She sought out an adult, described her feelings, and asked for help – and the adult helped resolve the conflict. With Roxana having provided her with language to talk about how she feels, Erica has new tools that allow her to respond in a new way.

Jewish Family Service's bilingual counseling has been so successful that they have a waiting list—and they are ready to address it. With funding from existing donors and from a donor-advised fund at Park City Community Foundation, they will soon hire a second bilingual counselor who will serve local clients five days a week, and they have moved into a new, larger Park City office to accommodate the increased services.

In 2017, Park City Community Foundation helped bring together the Summit County Mental Wellness Alliance, with a goal of creating system-wide improvements in mental health and substance use services across our region. One of the top priorities—ensuring sufficient services for Spanish speakers—has seen substantial progress, thanks to Jewish Family Service and other local providers.

When the Community Foundation convenes the community to address major needs and opportunities, solutions arise, funding flows, and people benefit—as did Erica and her family—in deep and sustainable ways.

> "It's an honor to partner with a proactive organization that is finding creative ways to support its community members and local nonprofits. I am grateful for the expertise and convening power the Community Foundation offered our family to come together in finding solutions that will have a real impact on mental health.

For the Love of Place

SNOW IS AT THE HEART of our community – it's critical to our culture and our economy. That's why our community has set an ambitious goal – carbon neutral by 2030.

As a community problem solver, Park City Community Foundation needs to look beyond the local to the regional, national, or even global when it comes to protecting our local sense of place. In the face of a changing climate, how do we act locally while inspiring action far beyond Park City?

Early this year, a group of citizens and public leaders proposed a conference of mountain communities that would be willing to join with Park City, Summit County, and others in committing to ambitious climate action by 2030. Thus was born Mountain Towns 2030, happening right here in Park City in early October, and Park City Community Foundation is a Mountain Towns 2030 Founding Partner.

Leaders, such as policy makers and resort operators, from 40 other mountain communities across the US and beyond will attend the Mountain Towns 2030 Net Zero Summit, make commitments to climate action, and stay connected as a coalition in the months and years to come.

> I love how the Community Foundation brings nonprofits together to achieve a directive. The sharing of information and ideas between organizations, people, and government make Park City a special place to live and give and Park City Community Foundation is at the center of it all.
> – Maureen Saborio
> Park City Community Foundation Board Member

Park City Community Foundation has helped rally volunteers and experts for the organizing team, and as "fiscal sponsor," are providing the administrative platform to launch this big idea.

Andy Beerman, Park City Mayor says, "Park City is at the forefront in leading mountain towns to take action in reversing climate change and Park City Community Foundation plays a critical role. Every generation has something that defines them, whether it's a world war, a depression, or putting a human on the moon. I think climate change is going to define this era and our local focus on this issue has the power to serve as an example for global impact."

Park City Community Foundation has now established the new Park City Climate Fund to inspire and contribute to local innovation and action around climate change, with the first call for proposals to be announced at the October summit. This new tool for local impact, combined with the power of a network of committed mountain towns, has the potential to inspire climate action far beyond Park City—which will be critical to helping address a global issue that extends far beyond our community's boundaries.

Interested in getting involved? Call or email us to find out more about the Park City Climate Fund. And as part of Mountain Towns 2030, Jane Goodall and Paul Hawken will be speaking at a public event the evening of October 2nd, and everyone is invited to join in.

Our Programs

Park City Community Foundation plays a vital role in solving our community's most challenging problems. We care for and invest in the people, the place, and the culture of greater Park City.

We operate several programs and funds that address emerging and unmet issues where we can have a direct and positive impact on our community.

LIVE PC GIVE PC is our annual day of giving and is a program of Park City Community Foundation. Last year alone it raised $2.4 million for our local nonprofits in 24 hours from people of all ages and backgrounds.

SOLOMON FUND is a program of Park City Community Foundation that offers local Latino children more inclusive opportunities to participate in recreational activities like sports, dance, and summer camps.

WOMEN'S GIVING FUND is an endowment at Park City Community Foundation with more than 1,300 members who make high-impact grants to local organizations that are helping women and children.

Our COMMUNITY FUND offers grants to local nonprofits to expand and accelerate their work, as well as opportunities to share their organization's mission.

For the Love of Culture

IN PARTNERSHIP with Park City Municipal Corporation, Park City Community Foundation is bringing the community together to build greater diversity, equity, and inclusion. This Social Equity Initiative is prioritizing the most significant equity challenges in our community.

In March 2018, our local City Council announced that "fairness and inclusion in Park City...is imperative to building and preserving a complete community" and voted to add Social Equity as one of the critical priorities to address. The city then contracted with Park City Community Foundation to take the lead role in collaborating with stakeholders to further the vision of a complete community where everyone has equitable access to opportunity, and feels respected, included, and empowered.

Over the last year, we have collected data from community surveys, held dozens of stakeholder conversations, conducted a listening tour with underrepresented groups, and compiled local, regional, and national statistics to help inform a Social Equity Strategic Plan. The resulting plan includes three key areas that will help to advance diversity, equity, and inclusion in our community: housing, education, and inclusion.

PC Tots, a high-quality, affordable childcare center in Park City, helps to address one of the key disparities in our community: the lack of early childhood care.

"The lack of good, affordable early childhood education emerged as an issue and because we prefer solving problems at their source, we decided to get behind this initiative. Solving for early childhood education stems the tide of a costly lifelong journey for children into adulthood, both from a personal development perspective and its impact on society.

– Brian and Kirsten Shirken
Donor Advised Fund advisors and Early Childhood Alliance leaders

One example of how we are already addressing disparities is our focus on early childhood education. Because of our close relationship with nonprofit organizations serving families, we had previously learned about the dire need for high-quality, early childcare in Park City a few years ago.

Many local families experience problems because they do not have access to safe, high-quality childcare for their little ones. As a result, parents have trouble staying in the workforce, low-income families spend more than 25% of their income for childcare, and babies are often put in compromised situations where they do not thrive.

This is a critical issue because over half of the children from families with lower incomes are not ready for kindergarten when they start school, a deficit that can stay with them through life and impact the community.

Our goal is to ensure that all young children have effective pathways to future success. We helped start PC Tots, a high-quality, affordable early childhood education center in Park City and it has been wildly successful. But currently, PC Tots has a waiting list of nearly 100 babies and toddlers, and there are many other early childhood services that need expansion and improvement to ensure that all children arrive at kindergarten ready to learn.

We have now established the Early Childhood Alliance as a key part of our Social Equity work to help solve some our community's most challenging problems. You can learn more about diversity, equity, inclusion, and other priority areas being addressed by the Social Equity Initiative at parkcitycf.org/socialequity.
