Dear Friend,

In April, we hosted a panel of local dreamers — young people who grew up in Park City but weren’t always citizens. These rising leaders bravely shared their stories. They told us about neighbors who took them to sports practice. They told us about parents who encouraged them to aim for college. A connected community of helpers and mentors, parents and extended family nurtured and supported these kids. Now they stood in front of us as impressive young adults.

What we didn’t expect, but did learn in listening to their stories, was the amount of stress and fear the dreamers in our community carry — every day. These young adults we met represent success stories, but their challenges are real, persistent, and not yet resolved.

The lesson we learned is at the heart of the Community Foundation’s work — caring for each other is complicated work. To achieve significant community impact and reach all the people of Park City, the Community Foundation convenes nonprofits, businesses, philanthropists, and government, stewards financial resources, and works community-wide to find enduring solutions.

Two people who exemplify our work are Tom and Pat Grossman. Tom and Pat are deeply involved in philanthropy in Minneapolis, their full-time home. But the issues they care about affect the people of Park City, too. That’s why they partner with Park City Community Foundation; they use our philanthropic advisory services and our foundational knowledge to transform their love for Park City to real results on the ground — on issues such as social justice, healthcare access, and more.

We think that you probably love Park City, too. Thank you for giving to the place and the people you love. Together, we are creating an enduring philanthropic community for all the people of Park City.

With gratitude,

We realize that no matter how perfect Park City seems to be for a week or two, it is a growing group of people with all the needs and problems that any small community has, even if they aren’t obvious to part-timers.

Early Learning Flourishes

When Sarahi was just turning two, her parents welcomed Hilda for regular visits to their home. Hilda is a Parents as Teachers parent educator for Holy Cross Ministries and she had lots of tips and support to offer on how to give a child a rich early learning environment.

Sarai built her language skills as her mother and father read her books and spoke with her in all kinds of daily situations. Games and toys helped Sarahi develop her physical abilities. Sarahi’s parents wanted to care for their own children and arranged it so that one parent worked in the morning and the other in the afternoon. With Hilda’s encouragement, Sarahi had more one-on-one time with both her mother and her father. And with friendly guidance, both parents were more patient with Sarahi and better able to give her constructive support.

Sarai has now moved on to the School Readiness Program for three-year-olds at Holy Cross Ministries. Her mother says, “Hilda showed us how Sarai could learn from experience and curiosity. My daughter has no limits—in fact, she has now become my teacher!”

Grants, nonprofit education, and fundraising opportunities provided by Park City Community Foundation to Holy Cross Ministries help make the Parents as Teachers and classroom programs possible. The positive results are leading the Community Foundation to dig deeper in exploring an early childhood learning initiative, to ensure that all children in our community get the best chance to thrive in their earliest years—which will serve the children, and the community, for the rest of their lives.

When champions like you step forward to address the gaps, no hurdle or inequity is insurmountable. With deep philanthropic expertise and ongoing partnerships, we know how to convene solutions for impact. Please make your gift to the Annual Fund today.
We moved to Park City because we love this place! We want to preserve, protect, and nurture our home for future generations to enjoy.

“A Trail Gets You Home”

When Mayor Wade Woolstenhulme of Oakley first heard that South Summit Trails Foundation was building a new trail on Summit Land Conservancy’s Stevens Grove Preserve, he was skeptical.

“Why do we need more people wandering around near people’s homes and farms?” he asked.

But South Summit Trails Foundation persisted, and Mayor Woolstenhulme decided not to fight it. With help from a grant jointly made by Park City Community Foundation and Mark Fischer’s MJF Foundation, South Summit Trails Foundation built the first mile and a half of what will become a five-mile trail along the Weber River.

When the mayor saw the emerging trail, he realized it was a peaceful treasure. Now, on clear winter days, he takes his horse for an early morning ride along the trail. He became so convinced of its value that he took an active pro-trails position in his recent re-election campaign.

Before South Summit Trails Foundation was founded in 2015, trying to find a trail to hike, bike, or ride in South Summit was like looking into a black hole. Now, there are maps, guideposts, and trails both new and improved—not to mention a city government in full support of making outdoor places feel even more like home.

Park City Community Foundation helps donors and organizations protect the places where we all love to live and play. We are succeeding in taking on the big issues and causes creating wide community impact. With an unrestricted gift, there is no limit to what we can achieve together. For the love of place, let’s protect the environment where we live, work, and play.

Inspiring an Inclusive Community

“¡Vamos Adrian! ¡Vamos Tanner!” yells Jairo as he cheers on the boys from the sidelines. At a recent local soccer tournament, we met Adrian and Tanner, two young players on the Park City Soccer Club eleven-and-under team. They met four years ago when they both started playing recreational league soccer at Basin Recreation, and ever since then they have been great friends. They are friends in school, hang out on the weekends, and call one another on Sundays to play soccer in the park. Not only have the two ten-year-old boys become friends but their families have grown close over the years as well. The families find themselves cheering together on the sidelines, both in English and in Spanish, and spending time with one another on and off the field.

Park City Soccer Club and Park City Community Foundation’s Solomon Fund have closely collaborated over the last 18 months to increase Latino participation. The Club has attended all of the Solomon Fund’s registration events, and with the help of the Solomon Fund, has increased outreach to the Latino community and has helped translate registration and participant information into Spanish. In addition, the Solomon Fund has made a grant to the Club each year to increase scholarship opportunities.

Park City Community Foundation’s Solomon Fund aims to address several barriers that currently keep kids from participating in sports and other extracurricular activities: communication and outreach, transportation, and scholarships and gear. The Fund facilitates access to activities, giving Latino kids opportunities to play together with their peers. Increasing Latino participation in sports is a priority, but the Solomon Fund goes far beyond that. As Adrian and Tanner and their families illustrate so warmly, the Solomon Fund’s mission is to create a more inclusive and complete community.

Leading with the Solomon Fund, Park City Community Foundation serves as a beacon for creative thinkers and dreamers. Our community is united by a deep and connected culture and when we care about the entire community, we create a more inclusive and inviting place to live. With an annual donation to the Park City Community Foundation, we can continue to have wide community impact.

When we care about the entire community then we care about each other’s well-being. An inclusive community is not only fairer, it is more inviting and frankly, a place in which I want to live.
